

Do you ever feel like life is a video game, consisting of multiple predetermined pathways, from which you can have several outcomes? Sometimes when you live your life like a video game, you can feel that exact moment when a pathway has been taken. You can't go back to the last checkpoint from your save file though, that would be a smart move, but unfortunately life isn't a video game. Life is living things and their activity, plain and simple. During certain time-spans, living creatures have opportunities presented to them. They can either seize the moment, and create their own path, or they can sit in passivity waiting for the moment to seize them. Sometimes the wrong choice will bring you to game over.